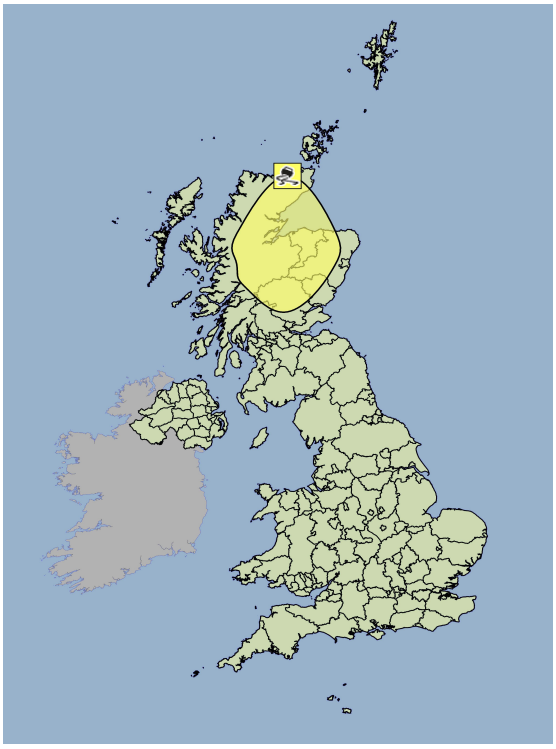
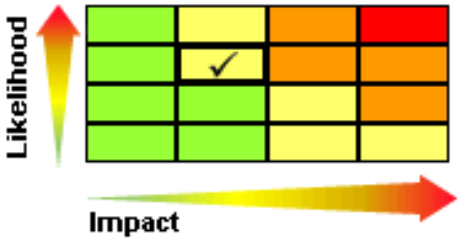
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A colder westerly airstream will bring frequent showers to Scotland on Wednesday night and on Thursday. These will turn increasingly wintry over higher ground, perhaps giving slight falls above 100-200m and several cm on high level routes above 300-400m. However ice is likely to be the main hazard on roads, especially as some showers will blow through to the east where road temperatures will be lower.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 01:00 on Thu, 08th Jan 2015 until 12:00 on Thu, 08th Jan 2015

Showers will turn increasingly wintry on high ground overnight and on Thursday morning. Clear spells between the showers will allow icy stretches to form. The public should be aware of the risk of some difficult driving conditions due to ice, and on some higher routes, local snow cover.
